

Abstract

Fullerene whiskers or fibers obtained by a liquid-liquid interfacial precipitation method are heat-treated in vacuum or in a gas atmosphere at a temperature of from 500 to 1,000°C to form a fullerene shell tube which can be used in wide applications such as field emission devices, gas filters, hydrogen storage materials and catalyst supports in energy, catalyst and semiconductor industries.